THE BRAND STORY

We begin where others end. At Fusecrafts, detail is not a finishing touch it is a discipline. Founded by an architect who swapped the scale of the building for the intimacy of the object, our studio lives in the "in-betweens" : the custom doors, the furniture, and the complex joinery that hold a space together. For us, fusion is not a trend; it is a rigorous methodology. We cross lines that others avoid, marrying wood with brass, stone with rattan, and raw industrial strength with precise hand finishing. Stepping into the project early as a thinking partner , we reject assumptions in favor of relentless workshop experimentation, full scale mockups, and iterative testing. We do not merely build pieces to sit inside a room; we resolve them so deeply that they truly belong to it.

THE FUSECRAFTS LOGO IS THE MOST RECOGNIZABLE ELEMENT OF OUR VISUAL IDENTITY. THE LOGO MARK EMBODIES OUR BRAND VALUES. NOTHING MORE, NOTHING LESS. IT SHOULD BE USED TO CAPTURE THE ESSENCE OF THE FUSECRAFTS BRAND. THE FOLLOWING GUIDANCE WILL SHOW YOU HOW TO MOST EFFECTIVELY USE OUR LOGO.

OUR LOGO

A continuous circular typography surrounds the fused central mark, representing an unending cycle of workshop experimentation and architectural thinking. This complete logo functions as a structural seal, a definitive promise that every material, technique, and complex layer within a project has been flawlessly resolved.

LOGO COLOUR

This primary logo color palette relies on a deeply grounded, sophisticated, and earthy triad. The combination of warm Chestnut, deep Moss Green, and muted Mocha establishes an organic yet highly structured visual identity. Together, these tones evoke a strong sense of stability, raw raw material, and enduring craftsmanship, balancing architectural permanence with a natural, understated elegance.

OUR ICON

Two elements become one unbroken form, where the structure of the 'F' seamlessly shapes into the curve of the 'C'. This icon is the visual signature of our core philosophy: a deliberate, physical fusion where separate materials meet to build a perfectly resolved whole.

PRIMARY COLOURS

This primary brand palette expands upon the core identity by anchoring the deep, structured tones of Moss Green, Chestnut, and Mocha with softer, balancing neutrals. The introduction of the warm cream and muted beige tones brings a breathing room and high contrast clarity to the palette, mimicking the relationship between raw, tactile materials and clean architectural space. This cohesive grid of tones feels deeply intentional, balancing organic warmth with a refined, minimalist aesthetic that feels both permanently grounded and modern.

SECONDARY COLOR

Expanding into a versatile spectrum of shades and tints, the secondary brand colors build depth and dynamic range on top of the primary foundation. By shifting the core values of Moss Green, Chestnut, and Mocha into lighter tints and deeper shades, the palette provides the necessary contrast and flexibility needed for complex layouts, typographic hierarchies, and environmental way finding.

TYPE COLOUR IN USE

When combining our primary and secondary colours in a piece of communication, always try to ensure legibility. Do not layer bright colours on top of another or dark colours on top of another in a way that would make something difficult to read. Here are a set of primary and secondary colour combinations that could be a good.

ACCENT COLOURS

An accent color is a secondary or tertiary shade used strategically in small, deliberate amounts to create visual interest and draw attention to crucial elements. In brand design, companies use accent colors to establish a clear visual hierarchy, guiding the consumer's eye directly to call-to-action buttons, key messaging, or important product features. By pairing a vibrant or contrasting accent color with a more muted, neutral base palette, a brand can inject energy and personality into its identity without overwhelming the overall aesthetic.

SPATIAL COLOUR

THE APPROACH

The workshop already carries a great deal of colour in it, through the wood, metal, and other materials the team works with every day. The approach is to let that material lead, and use colour only to support it, not compete with it. Most of the space stays close to its natural material state. Colour is used sparingly, and with intent, to mark out specific zones and touchpoints — never applied evenly across every surface.

SPATIAL COLOUR

TWO TYPES OF ELEMENTS

Everything in the workshop falls into one of two groups. This is what makes the approach easy to apply to anything new, now or years from now.

FIXED ELEMENTS

Part of the structure. Stay close to their natural material state.

- Walls and flooring — stays in its natural material tone; colour rarely touches this directly
- Columns and structural beams — may carry a narrow accent band at a natural break, such as a base or capital
- Doors, shutters and partition frames — stays in its natural finish; hardware may carry a small accent detail
- Workbench frames and fixed storage — stays neutral, since it sits closest to where materials are worked
- Ceiling elements (exposed ducting or beams) — stays untouched; not a place for the accent

FLEXIBLE ELEMENTS

Can change over time. Where the brand shows up most clearly.

- Signage and wayfinding — background stays close to the zone's base; the accent appears only in a border, icon, or header line
- Tool storage and shelving trim — the trim edge carries the zone's accent directly
- Material sample tags and racks — the tag carries the accent as a small detail, like a border or corner
- Workshop aprons and workwear — the accent shows as trim or stitching, not the full garment
- Visitor walkway markers, seating or rails — the accent sits on a visible edge or top surface, not the whole piece
- Packaging elements (boxes and tags) — the accent lives on the tag or seal, not the full box
- Future additions (display panels or screens) — checked against this same logic before any colour is applied

SPATIAL COLOUR

ZONING THE WORKSHOP

As someone moves from Upholstery to carpentry to painting to metal working, a consistent accent for each zone helps them understand where they are, without needing a single sign to tell them.

SPATIAL COLOUR

AS THE SPACE GROWS

Nothing here is fixed to only what exists today. Imagine a workshop apron and a nearby signage board, both placed in the finishing zone, because both carry the same accent, a visitor connects the two to the same part of the space before they read a single word.

As new elements are introduced, a display panel, a new signage system, additional seating, they are checked against this same thinking, so the space continues to feel considered, not assembled piece by piece over time.

PRIMARY TYPE

GT Walsheim Trial is the typographic spine of our visual identity. Born from bold, geometric principles of early twentieth century Swiss design, it carries a structural authority that naturally commands the page. Its clean, circular strokes and mathematical rhythm speak directly to the architectural mind, mimicking the clear, decisive lines drawn on a drafting table.

SECONDARY TYPE

Developed as a highly functional, modified variant of Space Mono, it strips away the rigid constraints of a fixed width typeface while keeping all of its raw, technical charm. Its architecture features flat terminals and open counters that evoke a clear, blueprint like aesthetic, mirroring the sharp precision of technical drawings and drafting tables. It is a font designed for performance exceptionally legible at small scales, making it ideal for technical descriptions, material labels, and workshop documentation.

Fusecrafts is a craft studio and detail consultancy built on architectural thinking at the object scale. Rather than executing pre-fixed specifications like a traditional vendor, the studio enters at the design stage as a collaborative partner to resolve the complex, material layered elements that define a space. Through a rigorous methodology of continuous material experimentation and iterative testing, Fusecrafts bridges the gap between drawing and execution.

HIGHLIGHTS

Sometimes we use colour to highlight certain words for emphasis. The highlight colour should be brighter than the rest of the sentence or paragraph, and is usually White. Here the combination of primary and secondary font also has been utilised to create a better contrast.

The label features a modern, geometric design with a subtle Omani-inspired pattern, blending shades of colors. Text on the label is in both Arabic and English. The overall impression is one of a refreshing, locally made comfort drink.
